INTRODUCTION

In an organization or company having human resources is the most important thing. Because human resources play a role in driving and controlling activities in an organization or company. All organizations or companies will certainly do everything they can to create a quality performance for their employees with good human resource management (Riyanto, Sutrisno, & Ali, 2017). Therefore, companies must always encourage employees with high enthusiasm to create and maintain superior human resources and be able to compete. Motivating employees is done for the progress and goals of the company's success. High work motivation will make workers more active in doing their jobs. Meanwhile, when a worker has low motivation, the implementation of his work is also low, provide up easily, and have inconvenience doing their work.

The mystery of motivation and performance is revealed by psychologists to find the root cause of motivation and demotivation in individuals, especially in an organization. According to psychologists such as Maslow's needs theory and Herzberg's two-factor theory, that salaries or wages, systems and procedures, facilities and working conditions are basic needs that must be met but do not significantly increase motivation. Whereas to optimally increase motivation, motivational factors are needed that are more than just meeting basic needs. Some other psychologists have even examined the occurrence of motivation in carrying out activities and determine factors that can increase motivation or decrease individual motivation.

Companies that have realized the importance of understanding employee motivation will always maintain factors that can improve employee performance. Motivation is said to be successful if within the employee concerned arises high morale to improve performance in a company.

THEORY/CALCULATION Employee Performance

(Turnbull et al., 2010) characterizes workers as "individuals who are paid to work for someone” (p.480). World Workers’ union explains that workers are individuals who do work for public or private companies and receive compensation, commissions, tips, piece rates (wages in-kind). While performance is motivation and capacity. For total assignments and jobs, an individual must have a certain level of desire and level of capacity. Desires and individual abilities are not feasible in doing work without a clear understanding.

The level of individual performance is influenced by factors related to the work itself, which combine conflicting roles and work / not work (Jayaweera, 2015). A person’s performance is a combination of mastery, business, and vacancies so that they can be judged by their work (Handayani, 2015). A person’s performance is influenced by the mobilization of energy, capacity, and environmental conditions (Riyanto, Wijaya, & Soerojo, 2016).

Another explanation about performance, according to (Riyanto et al., 2017), says that performance is the result accomplished by individuals through a measure determined for the work in question. According to Setyo et al., that performance is the result of the work of a worker or an activity carried out for a certain amount of time. In general, the overall performance of workers breaks even with the number (normal) of activities carried out by workers.

(Mangkunegara, 2011), said that the measurement of worker performance could be measured through five dimensions; in particular, there is the quality of work, the number of occupations, commitments, participation, and activities.

Research has suggested that current rewards result in fulfilling employee satisfaction, which specifically impacts employee performance. Gifts are management instruments that ideally affect an organization by impacting the behavior of the individual or bunch. All organizations utilize salary, progress, rewards, or other sorts of rewards to empower and energize high-level employee performance. Therefore, managers must consider a compensation structure that is significant and comprehensive.

Leadership is doing things the right way, to do it only requires individuals to follow the leader, and they trust you. If both of these are to be achieved, they must be motivated (Baldoni, 2005). A theory concludes that a leader and his workers increase each other’s quality and deep motivation (Rukmani, Ramesh, & Jayakrishnan, 2010). Motivation is a simple behavior and authority. This goes from having to do what is good for individuals and organizations. Leadership and motivation have a dynamic nature (Baldoni, 2005).

Reinforce organizational benefits and make sense of possession and pride within the world of work. This builds on affiliations that are by and large useful between the organization and workers, which is considered as the perfect environment in several organizations and occupations. The workers involved focus their work and day-to-day work with extra centrality, and this leads to unaltering progress in coordination and work methodologies. Workers perform their best interests and reflections with a feeling of having a place, enthusiasm, and charm, in a possible organization. Including they work with a sense of commitment and inclination towards the benefits of the organization for them (Yazdani, Yaghoubi, & Giri, 2011).

Trust is characterized as a person's affirmation of others, the choice to act based on their discourse, behavior, and choices. when a company needs to develop and be effective, trust plays an imperative role so it must be continued to guarantee the company’s presence and increment employee motivation (Annaamalai, Abdullah, & Alazidiyeen, 2010). This will make intrapersonal and interpersonal impacts on the inside and outside the company association.

Staff preparation is an important technique for spurring employees. One way supervisors can influence motivation is to provide data that is appropriate in the sentence of their activities to others.
Why Motivate Employees

Improving the adequacy of the performance of each company and also its development based on its main resources, workers, and the ability of supervisors to form a motivating atmosphere for their workers. In addition, it might be a challenge for leaders to keep individuals and their workers motivated, and their needs met. In this way, why every manager must pay attention to almost all the requirements and needs of their workers and what they are searching for.

Motivated workers can influence company income and create the work environment that some workers want as a put to interact with one another, not just as a place to "receive a salary" (Nandanwar, Surnis, & Nandanwar, 2010) In addition, well-motivated organizations will undoubtedly have more workers being encouraged, and subsequently, they will be more profitable, and this will lead to reserve funds being taken.

A company whose workers have low motivation so that the organization is powerless in facing challenges inside and outside because workers do not try hard to maintain organizational stability. Unstable organizations end up performing poorly. Companies must encourage/motivate their individuals and keep them to improve efficiency and maintain their competitiveness. Some individuals who are committed will feel propelled and do their best and work hard right.

(Mansoor, 2008), states that motivation can create an environment where workers will be encouraged, and subsequently, workers can work with their best quality. And also the company must encourage each worker to increase their competitive focal point and accomplish the required objectives of the company (Philip, C.T., Yu-Fang, Y., Liang-Chih, H., 2007). An analysis says that satisfied and energized workers are essential for organizational viability (Yee, Yeung, & Cheng, 2010).

Spurring individual motivation and their commitment is very important for work efficiency because they will emerge with full potential and with high quality and (Samuel & Chipunza, 2009), state that having a motivated workforce will provide competitive advantages needed by the companies and superior implementation of workers in making improvements to the quality of the organization to achieve higher productivity.

High Achievement Motivation Will Improve Employee Performance

The need for high achievers is an impetus that arises in a person to achieve the targets set. According to McClelland, behavioral traits of individuals who have a high-achievement motivation like responsibility for solving problems; tend to set difficult targets and have the courage to take consequences; has clear goals and makes sense; have a good work arrangement; and happy with the task done and always want to complete it perfectly. Instead, the characteristics of individuals who have low achievement motivation are being apathetic and not confident; they do not have personal responsibility at work; they work without clear plans and goals; every action is not restrained and deviates from the goal.

Between achievement motivation and the level of performance, there is a significant relationship (Huwaaidaul Azkiya, 2020) That is, individuals who have high achievement motivation will tend to have high levels of performance. Conversely, those with low achievement motivation are likely to get low performance.
